Abstract

According to the Qur'an and Sunnah, Islâm is concerned with social life. The importance given by Allah and the Prophet to the social structure of this religion cannot be denied. After the Prophet's death, Abu Bakr became his khalifah to run the affairs of the state. However, even if this is the case for human beings, it is impossible to say such a thing for Allah (swt), the Creator of everything, either intellectually or by tradition. Although Adam and his progeny were inevitably khalifah on earth, it is impossible to say whose caliph they were with certainty. However, Allah does not need a caliph/proxy independent of the world. The expression 'caliph of Allah' is not found in any verse or authentic hadith. The perception of Allah as a representable being may be an idea belonging to the Christians who regard Jesus as the most carnal form (son of Allah). Man can only be a representative/Khalifah to man or the jinn, who are voluntary beings like him, who ruled on earth before him. There is never a standard system of proxy between Allah and human beings who do not have equality in terms of ontological balance. Therefore, it is impossible to speak of Allah's appointment of a deputy/ khalifah, neither by reason nor reason. The highest authority for man, a caliph on earth, is to be a servant of Allah, who created him out of nothing. How can his ummah be Allah's caliph when the last prophet, Muhammad, was not Allah's caliph but His servant and messenger? Moreover, man, who is seen as the representative of Allah, can neither have free will nor be questioned for what he does. Because what he does is in the name of Allah, representing Allah! This is not an acceptable situation.

Kur'an ve Sünnet'e göre İslâm, sosyal hayatla ilgili bir dindir. Allah'ın ve Peygamber'in bu dinin sosyal yapısına verdiđi önem inkâr edilemez. Peygamber'in vefatından sonra Ebû Bekir, devlet işlerini yürütmek üzere onun halifesi olmuştur. Ancak insanlar için durum böyle olsa da her şeyin yaratıcısı olan Allah (c.c.) için böyle bir şey söylemek ne aklen ne de naklen mümkün değildir. Âdem ve soyunun yeryüzünde halife olduđu kesin olmakla beraber kimin halifesi olduğunu kesin olarak söylemek mümkün görünmemektedir. Ancak âlemlerden müstağni olan Allah'ın halifeye/vekile ihtiyacı yoktur. Allah'ın halifesi şeklinde bir ifadeye ne bir ayet ne de sahih herhangi bir hadiste rastlanmaktadır. Allah'ın temsil edilebilir bir varlık olarak algılanması Hz. İsa'yı en karne olmuş (Allah'ın ođlu) biçimi olarak gören Hristiyanlara ait bir görüş olabilir. İnsan ancak insana veya kendisinden önce yeryüzün

O halde Allah'ın vekil/halife edinmesinden söz etmek ne naklen ne de aklen asla mümkün değildir. Yeryüzünde halife olan insan için en yüksek makam kendisini yoktan var eden Allah'a kul olmaktır. Son peygamber Hz. Muhammed Allah'ın halifesi değil kulu ve elçisi iken nasıl olur da onun ümmeti Allah'ın halifesi olabilir. Ayrıca Allah'ın temsilcisi olarak görülen insan, ne özgür bir iradeye sahip olabilir ne de yapıp ettiklerinden dolayı sorgulanabilir. Çünkü yapıp ettikleri Allah adına, Allah'ı temsilendir! Bu ise kabul edilebilir bir durum değildir.

1. INTRODUCTION

The Holy Qur'ân, which brings together Islâm's principles of belief, worship, and morality in general principles, is an indispensable element of religious life. Understanding, explaining, and living this holy book, which is a guide to the way of truth, is also essential to being a good Muslim. The fact that the acceptance that man is the caliph of Allah, expressed by many commentators, academicians¹, and the public, poses problems regarding tawhîd belief has led us to examine the concept of the khalîfah in the context of tawhîd belief.

Although most of the studies on the concept of khalîfah in the Qur'an are related to the caliphate, those on the caliph do not address the problems arising from accepting man as the caliph of Allah in the context of the belief in tawhîd.

This study will examine the meanings encompassed by the word khalîfah, the concept of trust required by the khalîfahate, and both general and specific aspects of the khalîfahate. Focusing on the characteristics of responsible beings such as angels, jinn, and humans, the reasons and wisdom behind the appointment of humans, not angels and jinn as khalîfahs, will be explained. The evidence of those who claim that humans are the khalîfahs of Allah and the responses to them be presented and based on tanzîh, which is the foundation of monotheistic belief. We have explained the arguments of those who say that man is the khalîfah of Allah and the answers that can be given to them by referring to the sources of tafsir, hadith, 'aqîdah, fiqh, and history, as well as different independent studies on our subject. In conclusion, we have stated that in terms of the belief in tawhîd, man is not the khalîfah of Allah but his servant.

2. THE CONCEPT OF KHALĪFAH

In whose place was the artificial khalīfah on Earth? To reach the answer to the question, first of all, it is essential to explain the concepts of khalīfah and khalīfahate. The word khalīfah means representative in the fa'īl meter, derived from the root of the word successor. According to most commentators, the letter at the end is an exaggeration.² Its plural is khulafāa and khalāif.³ A khalīfah is someone who takes the place of another and rules on his behalf.⁴ The verb successor past implies that it was behind/successor, followed one after the other, took its place, and was found behind it.⁵ It is the opposite of first came/happened and found initially.⁶ Derived from the same root, khalfun means the next generation that takes the place of the predecessor, as in the expression successor-predecessor in Turkish. However, it implies the meaning of the lousy successor.⁷ On the reverse side of the khilāf, derived from the same root, ikhlāf (derived from akhlafa) means crossing over and turning from a valley.⁸ When used in the taf'īl section, it means to appoint a khalīfah; when used in the if'āl area, it means leaving a generation behind, replacing oneself, bringing one's hand to its sheath, and striking when one sees the enemy.⁹ It is also possible that the khalīfah means the one left as a successor.¹⁰ According to another view, khalīfah means the next generation, one after the other, century after century.¹¹ It has also been said that those who deputize for his office in the absence of the original will also be honored with the honor of the original owner of the office.¹² In a recitation, with the letter qāf, khalīqatūn is also read as a creature.¹³ It has been said that what is meant by the term khalīfah is not only Ādam¹⁴ but also

Ādam's offspring in his person.¹⁵ The qualities such as making mischief and shedding blood were not manifested in the person of Ādam but in those who came after him.¹⁶

The word khalīfahate, which is the infinitive of the past verb khalafa, means to protect the religion that the Prophet conveyed after the death of the Prophet, who said the message of revelation from Allah to his ummah and to put the world affairs in order.¹⁷ The person who has the power to save on behalf of the believers due to the bay'āt and who ensures the implementation of the rules is also called the khalīfah.¹⁸

The words derived from the root of khalafa are mentioned in one hundred and twenty-seven verses of the Qur'ān. The khalīfah, which is directly related to our subject, is mentioned in two verses;¹⁹ the plural of the khalīfah is in four verses,²⁰ and khulafā is in three verses.²¹ It is seen that the word istikhlāf is mentioned in four verses,²² and the phrase khalīf, which is indirectly related to the subject, takes place in two verses.²³

In the Qur'ān, the words khalīfah and istikhlāf are used in two general and specific meanings. In general, istikhlāf means that all people are the khalīfahs of the earth, everything on earth is submitted to their orders and benefits, and property is entrusted to them. They own the world by managing and reforming it.²⁴ The issue of the khalīfah created on earth, whose successor and whose representative, has been much debated. In this regard, it has been claimed that the representatives are of angels, jinn, or Allah, and it has also been put forward that human generations are interchangeable and that humans are the rulers of the Earth. However, the word khalīfah is not attributed to Allah in any verse of the Qur'ān; the term khalīfah of Allah is not mentioned in the Qur'ān. Allah states that He created everything on earth for man.²⁵ In that case, man must dominate and govern the world. Thus, man has been given a wide, but not unlimited, dominion.²⁶ Hūd was sent as a prophet to the people of Ād, and Šālīh was sent as a prophet to Thamūd. They called for their people to know Allah and

On the other hand, using individuals as a khalīfah was used only for Dāvūd with political content.²⁹ After this brief explanation, which consists of the dictionary and terminology meanings of the concepts of khalīfah and khalīfahate, a short description will be made about the living beings (angel-jinn-Iblis-devil-man-human) who can become khalīfahs. For the subject to be brief, explanations of concepts related to management, such as amīr, imām, malik, sultān, etc., will be excluded.³⁰

2. LIVING CREATURES

Living beings in the universe are not only humans, animals, and plants. There are also beings invisible to the naked eye, such as angels and jinn. To explain the khalīfa, it is necessary to recognize human beings, angels, and jinns, the most important representatives of the world of existence. This will be possible by knowing their characteristics.

Angels are the first creatures to come to mind regarding the invisible realm. Malak is derived from malk, which means power. The plural of an angel, which means strong, is malāike.³¹ The belief in angels exists in all true religions. By determining their duties, we can only define beings such as angels, whose mana and nature cannot be fully explained. Angels were created before humans and are free from human characteristics such as eating, drinking, masculinity, femininity, getting tired, and sleeping. They do not rebel against Allah; they do not go out of their command; they do what they were created for. They constantly engage in worship and obedience to Allah, glorifying Him. They were made with swift, strong wings and could instantly travel the heavens and earth. They cannot know the unseen but only know that much if Allah has told them about it.³² With the permission of Allah, they can take various forms and be seen by the prophets in their original condition. Even if they go out of their original state and enter another material form, it is also possible for them to be seen by other people.³³ According to some philosophers, angels are beings of the mind type in humans.³⁴ It is said that the angels learned from the Lawḥ al-Maḥfūz how they knew how

Ādam would cause mischief on earth and shed blood by looking at similar beings created and sent to the planet before and comparing them to jinn or wild animals.³⁵

Jinn is one of the invisible beings. The root of the word jinn means to hide and cover something from the senses. While the only individual of the jinn is called jinnī, it is seen that the word, which means snake³⁶ and madness,³⁷ can be used for the ancestors of this society in the Qur'ān. The word Ma'ārij,³⁸ which denotes the nature of the jinn, has been interpreted as a great, immaterial, smokeless fire that can penetrate everything, containing a mixture of red, yellow, and green colored pure flame.³⁹ Nār al-samūm⁴⁰ also means hot, burning, deadly wind blowing like a fire flame.⁴¹ Jinn was created from fire, and their creation predates the creation of humans. Some jinn are Muslim, some have not reached that level, and most are unbelievers. They do not know about ghāyb and are obliged to do specific jobs like people. They are responsible beings just like humans, to whom prophets were sent. Like humans, they eat, drink, marry and reproduce, have masculinity and femininity, and are born, raised, and die.⁴² It is known that Iblīs, which means despairing of goodness and regret, is one of the jinn groups who rebelled against Allah first.⁴³ He was given the name Iblīs because he first rejected the command of the supreme creator, inflicted wrath, and fell into insolvency.⁴⁴ The devil, which means to get away, burn with anger, and go crazy with rage, is rebellious of jinn, humans, and animals.⁴⁵ Throughout human history, the human-devil struggle has always been up-to-date. According to this, there is the devil under everything that harms humanity. For example, opposing servitude that causes trouble in this world and the hereafter, encouraging harams, exploiting women, interest and magic, provoking, giving delusions, lying and deceiving, making sins seem fancy, making them forget, cheating by magic,⁴⁶ etc. Negativities are the actions desired by satanism and are important diseases of the youth who grew up away from Islām. It can affect those who have sickness, doubt, and strife in their heart.⁴⁷ It is impossible to eliminate the influence of Satanism without faith. On the other hand, to be protected from the invisible devil, it is necessary to take shelter in Allah, who sees everything and has the power to neutralize it.

In this section, where we examined the concepts of angels and jinn, we saw that even though there are many differences between angels and humans, there are similarities between jinn and humans. Despite such differences between angels and humans, it is seen that angels aspire to the khalifahate on earth, and Iblīs, the leader of the jinn, competes for greatness rather than demanding the khalifahate.

Ādam, Abū al-Bashar, is the first human being and prophet. The issue of the origin of the word Ādam has preoccupied Islāmic scholars.⁴⁸ The phrase, mentioned seventeen times in the form of Ādam, seven times in the form of Banī Ādam, and once in the form of Ibnay-Ādam,⁴⁹ has a unique name connotation, especially in the verses in which it is mentioned alone. It is not a very remote possibility that the word has been used in various verses in the sense of the human species or human existence with its characteristics.⁵⁰ The word Ādam is a common name used for the human species in Hebrew, and it is used in this sense in more than five hundred places in The Old Testament (‘Ahd-i ‘Atīq), rarely as a proper name for the first man.⁵¹ The Prophet said, “O People! You are all children of Ādam. Ādam, on the other hand, was created from soil.”⁵² In the twentieth century, Darwin brought the theory of evolution, that the first ancestor of man was the ape, and insulted all human beings, especially Ādam. Those who believe in Darwin's theory despise this characteristic of human beings. Those with dignity and honor made it forbidden (ḥaram) and denied the one who commissioned them because they rejected prophets and books.⁵³ According to Bāṭinī-İsmā‘ilī authors who include many gnostic elements in their religious-philosophical thought systems and some scholars of the Imāmiyya Shī‘a, Ādam mentioned in the Qur’ān was not the first person on earth, and many Ādams passed away before him.⁵⁴ Ibn ‘Arabī said, “While circumambulating the Kā’ba, I witnessed a group circumambulating the Bayt Allah and saying the following during circumambulation: ‘As you circumambulate, we have circumambulated this Bayt in this way for many years!’ Hearing their words, I approached them. One of them turned to me; I asked, ‘How many years had passed since his death.’ ‘More than forty thousand years!’ he replied. I was amazed and said, ‘How? It was not even seven thousand years from our father Ādam to our Prophet (pbuh).’ He said, ‘Which Ādam are you talking about? The Ādam you are talking about is the Ādam who came at the beginning of the last seven thousand years!’ he said. The hadith of our Prophet, ‘There is no doubt that Allah created a hundred thousand Ādams before Ādam’ came to my mind.”

This narration was conveyed in a dream. The hadīth he narrated is not included in the reliable hadīth sources. It is possible that this narration, similar to the news in Shī-ī sources, does not belong to Ibn ‘Arabī. It is also possible that Ibn ‘Arabī, the defender of a particular school in Sūfism, was misunderstood and thus passed on to the sources. Because in other parts of Futūhāt, there are opinions that do not comply with the ideas attributed to Ibn ‘Arabī, although most are mystical.⁵⁵ In addition to all these possibilities, Ibn ‘Arabī, in his book Fuṣūṣ, accepts the Islāmīc thought exactly, taking Ādam as the only soul from which the human species derived.⁵⁶

On the other hand, the word human is derived from the root Ins, meaning human, human community. It refers to a social being with reason, ideas, and communication by talking.⁵⁷ In the Qur’ān, the plural form of human takes place in sixty-five areas, ins in eighteen regions, Insī and Anāsī in one place, and Nās in two hundred and thirty verses. In the Qur’ān, human beings are discussed in various aspects; how they were created, their nature, and the purpose of creation are explained as a whole.⁵⁸ Every human being can believe in and serve a superior being and also have features such as mischief, cruelty, ingratitude, ignorance, turning to prayer when one is hurt, despair when one receives mercy, being prosperous when blessings are given, being greedy, whining and stingy, being hasty, having a weak disposition, being combative, being wicked and bloodshed,⁵⁹ etc.⁶⁰ God created people on a single nature consisting of body, organs on the material plane,⁶¹ and spirit, intelligence, reason, instincts, psychological states, etc., on the spiritual plane.⁶² This nature is complete, sound, divine, and suitable for going toward the truth; there is no crookedness or defect.⁶³ Man is capable of both good and evil. This ability is present in his structure. A person who chooses faith becomes a believer, while a person who determines disbelief and denial becomes an unbeliever and a denier.⁶⁴ Allah took the covenant from Ādam and all his descendants. In a sense, this is a contract between Allah and the people.⁶⁵ A person created as a khalīfah and sent to the world can preserve this feature only if he does what is necessary for the khalīfahate. The necessity of the khalīfahate is undoubtedly to carry the trust that the mountains, the earth, and the sky are afraid to take. Confidence is peace of mind, removing fear, and feeling secure. Amān, on the other hand, means to be safe and to give assurance. When the verb Amān from the root of Īmān is transitive, it gives him confidence; if it is intransitive, it means he has confidence. Faith, which means to trust and believe, is also used as a name for religion.⁶⁶ The entrust that comes from the root of trust and belief is what is left with someone. The testament (‘Ahd) is a promise to do something.⁶⁷ Various interpretations have been made in the tafsīr about what this trust is: the obligatory, obedience, honor, khalīfahate, the word of Lā ilāha illallāh, limbs, knowing Allah, performing prayers, paying alms (Zakāt), fasting in Ramaḍān, pilgrimage, telling the truth, paying the debt, measuring and weighing precisely, and most essential things entrusted to the person. These are the things that are imposed and, in short, all the orders and prohibitions that man is responsible for.⁶⁸ Allah, the Exalted, warns those who do not fulfill this obligation to appoint others as khalīfahs in their place. Accordingly, only those who meet the duties required by this position can remain part of the khalīfahate. Throughout history, societies in this sense have replaced each other, and they have realized the khalīfahate.

3. IS MAN THE KHALĪFAH OF ALLAH?

It is known that religions significantly influence social order and systems. The social order's needs, aims, and objectives are reflected in some functions in the religious dimension and the structures created to fulfill these functions.⁶⁹ Many Islāmic scholars have expressed that man can be the khalīfah of Allah. Those who hold this opinion have put forward some evidence. According to them, Ādam is the first man. Allah created him out of nothing, ordered the angels to prostrate to him, taught him the names of things, and appointed him as the first prophet to implement Allah's decree on earth. These features are sufficient reasons for Ādam to be accepted as the khalīfah of Allah.⁷⁰ However, it is never possible for any being, including human beings, to represent Allah and act in his place. The khalīfahate of Ādam and his descendants consists of living by His will on earth, which is the property of Allah, and disposing of by His instructions. The verse stating that humans were created to be servants of Allah⁷¹ and the verses stating that they were made as khalifahs tell the same truth. Man will know that the opportunities and blessings given to him are the property of Allah, that they are entrusted to him depending on a purpose and condition, and that he is obliged to dispose of them by the will and consent of the owner and will act with this consciousness. The fact that Allah the Almighty sent revelations starting from Ādam, the first human being, shows that he did not leave humans alone and that prophets appealed to people's eyes and hearts. It must also prove that man cannot be the khalifah of Allah but can only be a servant.

We want to express that the idea that God breathed into a man with his soul and, therefore, man has become the khalifah of God, a common belief among Muslims, does not comply with Islāmic belief and creed. In Arabic, the word soul is derived from the word rīh, which means to enter something.⁷² As a term, it has been used in various meanings such as The Qur'ān, Gabriel, revelation, Jesus (a.s.), a great angel other than Jibrīl, strength, animal spirit, human spirit,⁷³ a species created like a human being who eats and drinks called spirit, a class of angels that eats and drinks, life, heart, breath, blood, one of the qualities of the body and a part of the body. Islāmic scholars have made many interpretations not about the truth and nature of the soul,⁷⁴ which is impossible for humans to know,⁷⁵ but about the qualities of the soul that humans can know and the signs of its presence or absence.⁷⁶ According to the good view, there is no religious obstacle to researching certain things related to the soul.⁷⁷ All the prophets said that spirits were created. The Creator is Allah alone. Allah's attributes, such as knowledge, power, life, will, hearing, and seeing, are among the content of Allah's name. The adjectives, which are the content of this name, are eternal, like the essence of Allah. Everything other than this name has been created. Allah is the Lord of us and of our ancestors before us.⁷⁸ The fact that Allah is Lord is not only for our body but also for our body and soul integrity. Because it is these two that makeup man. If Allah were not the Lord of the soul, our body would be created, and our soul would be the creator, which is false. The hadīth and verses say that angels were created. Angels are bodiless but embodied abstract souls. When an angel (who will breathe a soul into a man) is created, the human spirit that his blowing will form will also be created. As for the soul complying with Allah, in phrases such as ʿilmullāh

(knowledge of Allah), Quđratullāh (power of Allah), and Kalāmullāh (word of Allah), knowledge, power, and speech are the attributes that are included in the content of the name of Allah. Phrases such as Baytullāh (God's house), Nākatullāh (God's camel), and Mālullāh (God's property) refer to the house, camel, and property that God created and are unique to him.⁷⁹ Here, the house or the camel need not be eternal. So are Rūhullāh (spirit of Allah) and ʿAbdullāh (servant of Allah). It means the soul and servant belong to Allah under His rule. These discourses do not mean the soul or the servant is eternal, like Allah. In verse, nafakhtu means blowing on a hollow object suitable for breathing and inflating with the mouth or a tool. Here, on the matter of which is capable of life, there is a representation of something that disrupts life. Therefore, there is no real nafkh (blowing), only a representational (symbolic) expression.⁸⁰ Christians believe Jesus is the soul; “then he is His son”, they say, whereas they do not understand the expression, “and he blew into the man his spirit.” This expression of the verse means “from his spirit, which is his property”, just like someone says, “My home, my slave...” Allah Almighty did not say that He gives to man through his body.⁸¹ The soul's attribution (connection) to God indicates man's greatness and value.⁸² The first Şūfis were unanimous in their belief that the soul was created. But later, some claimed the seniority of the soul. The (Unity of body) Vahdat-i Vucud view divided the soul into God's and Ādam's spirits. God's spirit is eternal. But this spirit is created when it is blown from Allah to Ādam. According to this view, the soul belongs to Allah and is passed to Ādam by being inspired by Him. They said that although Ādam's spirit was created due to this revelation, the spirit is not a creature. We do not agree with these views of the (Unity of body) Vahdat-i Vucud. We abstain from attributing souls to Allah. According to the scholars of Ahl al-Sunnah, angels, jinn, and human spirits were created. Only Allah is pre-eternal and free from form. Angels and demons are spirits, but they are embodied spirits.⁸³ The soul does not pass from one body to another; the soul has no separate existence from the body. All souls are created. There is no relationship between Allah and souls. The soul is from the command realm of Allah. If this soul does not have a unique name, like Gabriel, but a general soul, then the soul, from the command of the Lord, is the being that gives life to creatures. This command of the Lord, which is the dynamism of creation, is directed from heaven to earth. Creation began from Soul to matter. Bodily matter beings were created by the soul gaining density and taking shape. The Soul, which appears in shapes by gaining density, has a purpose: to rise to Allah again by wandering around the beings. It takes a long time for the soul to descend into objects, appear in various forms, reach human perfection, and finally ascend to Allah. This period may last fifty thousand years⁸⁴ or more. Only Allah knows this. We cannot measure this time on our account. As it is seen, the definitions of Ahl al-Sunnah about the soul do not refer to its truth or go beyond explaining some of its qualities, duties, and effects. In any case, scholars agree that perception, voluntary movements, hearing, seeing, and feeling indicate the soul's presence in the corpse, and their absence indicates the absence of the soul in the corpse.⁸⁵

Those who say that man is the khalifah of God, the fact that believers are the khalifahs of Allah on earth is to value them, just as the word khalifah has nothing to do with the word's lexical meaning, in verse expressing Karramnā shows that human beings are valued⁸⁶. Also, when Abū Bakr assumed the khalifahate, he was called "O khalifah of Allah! and he said, I am not the khalifah of Allah, I am only the khalifah of the Messenger of Allah (pbuh), and that is enough for me."⁸⁷ When he was offered to be addressed as the khalifah of Allah, 'Omar also refused to be discussed in that way. If Allah's khalifah's purpose had been to carry out His orders, neither Abū Bakr nor 'Omar would have opposed it. Their goal was to implement Allah's orders and to be exemplary servants.

As for the claim that angels aspire to the khalifahate because the earthly khalifahate means the khalifahate of Allah⁸⁸, if Allah had told that He would create a khalifah for Him in verse, the first thing that came to mind of angels would not have been to shed blood and cause mischief, for Allah is free from shedding blood and committing misconduct.

As for the claim of those who say that since Almighty Allah taught Ādam the names and allowed him to acquire knowledge, he and his descendants are the khalifahs of Allah. The fact that Ādam was taught the words and was given the ability to acquire knowledge is an issue that elevates man's position among other beings. However, this has nothing to do with being the khalifah of Allah. If such a thing had happened, creatures superior to humans in one way or another would also have become the vicegerents of Allah. Human knowledge, which has nothing to do with Allah's knowledge, can never represent Allah's knowledge.

Based on the hadith "God created Ādam in his image"⁸⁹ in Bukhari, those who claim that man is the khalifah of God explain the hadith with the text⁹⁰ in the Torah.⁹¹ However, this hadith has nothing to do with what is described in the Torah. In great detail, Ibn Fūrak (d. 406/1016) commented on the hadiths on this subject. The conclusion we draw from this commentary is that Allah is in the same form as the slave of the man who beat his slave. A man who beats his slave by slapping him in the face is insulting his ancestor Ādam and, therefore, all the prophets. Here, the ugliness of enslaving and beating human beings, whom God created in the most beautiful form, is expressed. Otherwise, it is not that man was created in the image of Allah, God forbid. 92

When it comes to the claim that man is the only creature that carries the names and attributes of God in himself and that man is the khalīfah of God, the claim that man is the only creature with God's words and features is also untrue. Almighty Allah is unique in His Names and Attributes as He is in Himself, and His Attributes are unlimited. He has sight but not like our seeing, hearing but not our hearing, etc. In addition, Allah has such attributes that we do not have. Man is one of many to be mentioned regarding the wanted adjectives. If a man has a vision, all living things have a vision. Some creatures even see better than humans. This is the case with other adjectives. Even if a man were superior to other living things with all his qualities, this would not mean that he was the vicegerent of Allah because the khalīfahate is a matter arising from the absence of the person who is the khalīfah or his inability to carry out his affairs. In short, khalīfah means to take over authority.

Taking over command and taking orders are two different things. Man does not inherit the power of Allah so that he becomes His khalīfah. Man's position in front of Allah is to take orders, which means servitude.⁹³ Ibn Taymiyya, Zarkashī, Ibn Hajar, Şuyūtī, and other scholars said the hadīth “I was an unknown treasure, but I wished to be known, I created a creature and introduced myself to him, and he recognized me”⁹⁴ do not belong to our Prophet.

Those whom Allah has promised⁹⁵ to make khalīfahs and make them rulers on earth have made his religion dominant on earth and continue the war to save people from the tyranny of the tyrants. Whether in a general or specific sense, the khalīfahate has the essence of making the religion of Allah dominant. This essence can also be felt in the social sphere of the khalīfahate and gains a political appearance with its realization and organization. Allah informed David that he had made him the khalīfah on earth and ordered him to judge between people with the truth.⁹⁶ When Abraham received the news from Allah that he was made an Imām for people, he wanted his descendants to be promoted to this position. Allah stated that this covenant would not be in question⁹⁷ for the oppressors.⁹⁸ Khalīfahate means the manifestation of Allah's sovereignty with clarity in every field. All people are responsible for it. The society that wants to rise to such a rank, or rather, does not want to fall from this rank, has to act accordingly. The highest representative of this type of society is the khalifah, elected by the khalifahs on earth of their own free will. The khalifah must be able to bear this trust. Because trusting competent people is the order of the Quran.⁹⁹ In this sense, all prophets are khalifahs. They are the prophets' successors in carrying the most sacred burden entrusted to them, applying Allah's decrees, and telling them to their ummah. All the people who listened to the prophets listened to the divine invitation, lived according to the standards set by Allah, and became khalifahs instead of each other from generation to generation in carrying this blessed burden. All those who live in the name of Allah, rule by what Allah has sent down, and use their power and authority to make the name of Allah be exalted are also worthy of this title of the khalifahate. Man is the khalifah of the earth, and this khalifahate is to rule the earth. In this way, human societies replace each other from generation to generation, becoming successors. When a community betrays the trust, Allah replaces it with another community and makes them the successors of the earth. In that case, using the khalifah only as a substitute for someone would mean narrowing the content of the concept to a great extent.¹⁰⁰ What is required of people is to fulfill the requirements of the khalifahate. This is possible by staying within limits set by Allah. In this sense, all people are people whom Allah has appointed as vicegerents on earth. We call the general khalifahate that all people have been appointed this way. This includes all descendants of Ādam. Man is obliged to fulfill the requirements of the trust he has taken as a result of his khalifahate. The entity to be responsible must have certain characteristics. At the forefront of these features are natural features. In other words, the features of understanding, interpreting, choosing, and being able to do what he wants, human beings have all these features. On the other hand, angels who do not have these characteristics are not suitable for being khalifahs in terms of their nature. Therefore, we can say that human beings cannot be successors to angels. Before humans, jinns were volitional beings able to take responsibility, live on earth, make mischief, and shed blood. It can be said that Allah the Exalted punished them and made humanity the vicegerent in their place on earth, or that human beings continued their lineage from generation to generation and succeeded each other. For now, we cannot say the opposite. However, one more possibility has been mentioned about who the khalifah of man is, which is the matter of being the khalifah of Allah, which damages the belief of tawhīd. The principle of tawhīd, which constitutes the essence of Islām, categorically rejects the belief that the king, the extreme point of the culture of theocracy, has a divine element, holiness.¹⁰¹ It is by no means possible to verify the view that all powers,¹⁰² which Christian theology confirms, stem from the will of God, either directly or indirectly, in terms of the Qur'ān. The view that bases power on the will of Allah in Muslim theologies has entered as an extension of the belief in destiny and was especially supported by tyrannical rulers who transformed the administration into property. Considering both the dissatisfied attitude towards the administration and the acceptance together in the time of the Umayyads, fate played a calming role for the masses. It became the point of legitimacy for the architects of politics. The Umayyads tended to understand the khalifahate as the vicegerent of Allah. The Abbasids claimed that Allah's will was embodied through the khalifahs, with titles containing coercion¹⁰³ such as Şultānullāh, Amīnullāh, al-Imām al-Muştaşfā, and Zıllullāh. It is clear that such a doctrine, which tries to justify the legitimacy of the Şultān with the theory of divine right, will see opposition as unnecessary and even as an act that can be interpreted as opposing the divine will. It is impossible to reconcile the idea that all power derives from God and is responsible only to Him with Islām, which regards individuals as equal, free, and responsible. The statement of Abū Bakr in his speech after he was elected khalifah, "I became your ruler, and I am not the best of you,"¹⁰⁴ means that contrary to the theory of divine right, the khalifah is not the deputy of Allah. Still, a fallible ordinary individual, but the highest public official appointed by the allegiance contract is doing. Despite the sloppy statements that the khalifah is the deputy of Allah, the necessity of appointing a khalifah has also been a matter of debate. al-Aşamm and Khārijites from the Mu'tazila claimed that the appointment of an Imām is not obligatory as long as people perform hajj (pilgrimage) and jihād, act reasonably and fulfill each other's rights and legal requirements. The Shī'a's understanding of imamate appears as a different version of the theory of divine right. According to them, Imāmate occurs openly or secretly by means and by Allah's appointment. In their eyes, the Imāmate is a continuation of the prophethood, and the imam needs to know the religious rules. They said that Imāmate is more necessary than prophethood. However, unlike Shī'a, most Ahl al-Sunnah, Mu'tazila, Murjia, and Khārijites agreed that the source and basis of imāmate is only the vote, election, and alliance of the ummah. Therefore, the relationship between the rulers and the ruled is a regulatory relationship to be determined by applying the law with its norms and principles. In addition, political power is not only responsible to God but also legally to society. The responsibility of the ruler means the right of the people to question. An essential way of doing this is the criticism and opposition between the political parties in the House of Representatives and the non-governmental organizations.¹⁰⁵

CONCLUSION, DISCUSSION AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Allah, independent of the world, does not need a khalifah/deputy. There is neither a verse nor any authentic hadith that refers to the khalifah of Allah. The perception of God as a representable being may be a Christian notion that sees Jesus as his most carnal (son of God) form. Man can be a representative/khalifah only to man or to jinn, who is also a volitional entity like himself, who ruled the earth before him. No standard mandate system exists between God and man, and neither has equality regarding ontological balance. In that case, it is never possible to talk about Allah's appointing a deputy/khalifah. A person fulfills the requirement of the trust that he takes responsibility for. He can maintain his khalifahate on earth if he meets the necessities of worshipping Allah. Otherwise, he will be dismissed from the position of the khalifahate. The highest rank for a person who is the khalifah on earth is to be a servant to Allah, who created him out of nothing. How can his ummah be the khalifah of Allah when the last prophet, Muḥammad, is not the khalifah of Allah but his servant and Messenger? It is not possible for a human being to be the khalifah of Allah, neither verbally nor mentally. Man is being tested on how to act. However, we cannot talk about the free will of someone seen as the representative of Allah. It is out of the question for someone with such a status to be questioned for their actions. Because what they do is in the name of Allah! This is not a good situation. Seeking a place for human beings by shifting them to an undeserved status in the universe instead of the position determined by Allah means reversing the existing balance in things. In the Qur'ān, although expressions such as the khalifah of Allah were not mentioned even for Him in the Qur'ān, adjectives such as the khalifah of the Messenger of Allah, the leader of the believers, and the khalifah of the Muslims were not sufficient for the so-called khalifahs from the Umayyads. To use Islām as a tool of religion for politics, they saw the attributes of Allah's khalifah and Allah's shadow on earth as suitable titles for them. These independent leaders, who are the declared representatives of God on earth, interpret religion according to the politics/practice they put forward by pretending not to be the servant of God but to be his deputy and cover their oppression so they will easily continue their exploitative system in which they have immunity. Still, they will never be criticized because of their Şultān's act by the will of Allah!

Throughout history, human beings have possessed qualities they do not deserve, contrary to divine justice. Among those who display this negative attitude are Jews and Christians, and even illiterate Qurayshis, who were exposed to revelation but did not appreciate and distort it. Jews and Christians defended the view that they are the race chosen by Allah, saying, "We are the sons and lovers of Allah."¹⁰⁶ Attributing the outcome of the elephant incident to their superiority, the Quraysh claimed they were more worthy of Masjid al-Ḥaram¹⁰⁷ and tried to make all tribes repay the Quraysh with a privilege they did not deserve.¹⁰⁸ As can be seen, the oppressors tried to influence and empower the oppressed, claiming that they acted in the name of Allah by using the tendency to believe in Allah, an indispensable phenomenon in human nature, to guarantee their legitimacy. According to their claims, the ignorant mentality was closer to Allah before the Prophethood.¹⁰⁹ After the Prophethood, he was the khalifah of Allah in the Umayyad period. In the later periods of history, when Islāmīc thought changed, it was Zillullāh, the shadow of God. Now, if the Şultān is asked to give up his cruelty, there is only one thing to do: sit and pray! Because rebelling against the Şultān, the shadow of Allah on earth in every way, is the greatest sin!
